Singapore Airshow, Asia's largest aerospace and defence show, continues to attract strong support from leading industry players and thought leaders.

A packed schedule of flight displays and ground tours will be complemented by strategic high-level conferences and business forums next year.

One core conference is the Singapore Airshow Aviation Leadership Summit (SAALS), a high-level conference jointly organised by the Civil Aviation Authority of Singapore (CAAS), Experia Events, the International Air Transport Association (IATA) and the Singapore Ministry of Transport (MOT), will be held on 12-13 February. It will provide a platform for government leaders, airlines, airport operators and regulators, air navigation service providers and manufacturers to address a wide range of issues on building a successful and sustainable future, as well as climate change and security challenges.

A major highlight of Singapore Airshow 2012 off the runway will be the Business Forums which Experia Events is co-organising with industry partners. Presented by top aerospace buyers, high-level executives from government agencies and industry leaders, trade visitors and exhibitors at the Business Forums will be given the opportunity to understand procurement trends and strategies to tap potential business prospects and joint ventures in key growth markets, like India, China and Southeast Asia.

Jimmy Lau, MD of Experia Events, said the strong growth in the Asia Pacific region has reinforced the position of Singapore Airshow as the key platform in the aviation industry to respond to rising demand in the region.

The Singapore Airshow 2012 returns from 14-19 February 2012 at the Changi Exhibition Centre and has consistently drawn strong attendance from high-level military delegations, senior government officials and leading industry players. With the strong participation this year, the event looks set to be bigger and more spectacular, presenting the finest in aviation technologies and systems from some 900 companies across 50 countries.
